In my opinion, Microsoft is being treated unfairly. If it wasn't for the Windows operating system, we would be in the dark ages. Windows has allowed many people to make use of computers, where before, they may have been presented with ugly text and command lines - with NO STANDARDS. Everyone likes to take down people who become too successful. Why can't these companies with lawsuits against MS stop crying and be more creative. Why do we have to make success easy for everyone?

If they want easy, why don't these companies write software for Linux. Linux is free for everyone. Linux was supposed to be the Windows killer. There are opportunities everywhere for these companies. Instead, they want to ride on Microsoft's success by publishing on Microsoft's OS like as if it were a right, and they want to rape MS at the same time. It boggles my mind. Those crybabies should get lost and write Linux applications. Does America have to lessen our standards for creativity and innovation? The REAL creative people will always find a way too succeed, but all I see are companies that want the easy "success" by lawsuits. This country has become filled with lawsuits as an excuse to be less creative and less innovative.

Let's not be more creative and innovative. Let's all companies band together and bring down the ones that are successful, and lower our standards of success. Let's bring down Microsoft, not with creativity and innovation, but with lawsuits. Better yet, let's bring down Microsoft while using Windows.
